

Dear Sidemen,

When our class were considering who to write to, you were identified as the most effective in our sight against child poverty.

As you know, this predicament is escalating quicker than ever. Already, over 1 in 3 children under 5 are living in homes that don't have enough healthy, nutritious food. Trussel food banks across the UK have had to distribute 2.9 million food parcels in the last 12 months. This is very alarming as nobody should have to rely on parcels on this massive scale.

The obvious solution is to turn to you. We need you more than ever. This is because you have a significant influence on social media. According to our research, we found out that your Youtube channels have around 6 million views globally. Your online reach is huge and the power of spreading the word about child poverty is in your hands. You have also raised an impressive £4,700,000 which is essential for the poverty-stricken children of the UK.

Hunger is an enormous problem and has a plethora of unhealth effects. For one, it makes learning in school much more difficult. Another effect of this is that children will feel tired due to low energy levels. ~~Dist~~ Disruptive behavior is also commonly identified as an effect of hunger.

My question to you is: what can you do about this problem? I suggest that you do another fundraising video like you did in Covid-19 for the NHS.

We look forward to hearing your reply, and we wish you a very Merry Christmas.

Yours sincerely,

Ameer, Y6

Dear Sidemen

I am writing to you because when our class was considering who to write to, you were identified as a perfect match.

This letter is about food poverty and the effects of it. The problem is that food poverty is affecting our bodies for school and our brain needs food so it can send messages to our bodies. If we don't heal the scar that food poverty has made, then we won't have healthy bodies and brains for school.

There is clearly something your group feels passionate about. Therefore, we wondered whether in your next charity match, maybe some of the money could be donated to some food banks.

The effects of hunger can be, fatigue, dizziness and weakness as well as cognitive emotions such as irritability, difficulty concentrating and anxiety.

Is there anything you can do about it? Your charity also quoted, "We believe that every human being deserves the chance to access the opportunities and places that enable happy and success lives".

We look forward to your response and we wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Yours sincerely,
Aljie

Dear sir starter

As a person of, power, community and philanthropy, me and my class knew you would be the biggest help to fix our problem. Child food poverty. Is unfortunately a problem, a big and huge problem.

Unfortunately, food poverty is struggled with by almost 8% of people just in reading, even worse in the north east of England it can reach up to 25%! Despite being 6th richest in the world our poverty is one of the highest in Europe. We need to get our priorities straight with fixing food poverty high on that list.

We beseech you to step in and lower the amount of people struggling with food poverty. We need you to really make a difference, to influence and impact our community. To help those who struggle with food poverty. 189,903 meals were given out last year and 3,506 children were fed! Unfortunately people who were employed still had to turn to food banks.

Hunger can and often effects physical and mental health (physical becoming dangerously skinny, and mental health anxiety, depression and withdrawal) affecting school work and a chance of a bright future. If children, who are currently in school especially primary, grow-up hunger and financially struggling it will be because of government failings. We know that a week or 2 ago you came to our ~~town~~ town, to talk about breakfast club so we know this is an issue your desperately trying solve.

I implore that you raise the living wage, although people can live off it-they barely scrape by.
